CONSPIRATORS NOW FEEL THEIR POSITIONS SECURE.

Belgrade, June 17 .- With the receipt of the Czar's telegram to King Peter, in the opinion of best-informed persons, natives and foreigners, all possibility of an internal rising against the provisional Government of Servia has passed.

The dispatch has so strengthened the hands of the conspirators that there is no chance whatever of opposition to them. Nothing is now heard but talk of the ap proaching reception of the new King. The municipality of Belgrade is also sending a deputation to meet King Peter, and intends erecting three triumphal arches between the railroad station and the town.

The new royal cipher consists of the letter "P." with a number one—"P. L".
Large crowds are constantly gathering before the windows of a shop on the main street of Belgrade, where, since the receipt of the Czar's message, a large photograph of the chief military actors in the late drama has been displayed. It is still uncertain whether the Parliamentary deputation to greet King Peter will leave here to-night or to-morrow.

SCENE OF TRAGEDY. The correspondent of the Associated Press was to-day allowed to inspect the palace in which King Alexander and Queen Draga

The bedroom, which is furnished in Empire style, remains in the same condition as when the King and Queen fied on the approach of the assussins. French novels lie on the King's table, and the Queen's tollet articles, perfumes and cosmetics cover her dressing table.

A simple wardrobe room, leading directly from the bedroom, was the scene of the final act in the dramz. The apartment is lofty, but scarcely seven feet wide and fifteen feet long, and is furnished only with three great wardrobes.

The officers who attended the correspondent showed the latter the bloodstained floor at one end of the room, where the King and Queen fell, and the broken Venetian shutter at the window through which their bodies were thrown to the ground.

SECRET STAIRWAY.

SECRET STAIRWAY.

A secret stairway leads through the floor to the rooms in the southern end of the palace. By this stairway the hapless couple might have attempted to escape, but they were unable to do so because the opening of this stairway was covered by a heavy chest.

Escape, in any event, would have been impossible, as the soldiers who had surrounded the palace were so determined to kill the King and Queen that they had even placed cannon in front of the palace and were prepared to destroy the building in the event of failing to find their prey.

Each of the three rooms between the vestibule and the bedchamber showed marks of the tragedy. Mirrors were shattered, pictures were shot through, furniture broken, there were builet holes in the doors and in the oil portraits of the King, which were the every room, and most of the latter were otherwise mutilated.

Contrary to the general understanding, but little effort had been made to renovate the apartments, except where the carpenters were making two new doors to replace those which had been blown to pieces at the time the conspirators forced their way into the rooms occupied by the King and Queen. The royal apartments were simply and tastefully furnished, chiefly in Oriental style, and presented a homelike appearance. The interior of the palace might have been that of a country house belonging to a prosperous American.

The house of the King's Adjutant, Lasar Petrovics, which was the first attacked. Is even a greater wreck than the royal apartments in the palace. The entrance was completely destroyed by dynamite. The Adjutant then escaped unhurt, but he was killed later in the vestibule of the palace. A large blood-stain marks the spot where the officer died.

According to Marquette's account of the trouble he discharged Meyer, who was employed as a laborer in Marquette's garden, and the dismissed workman became angry. About midnight Tuesday, Marquette says, Meyer came to his home and fired a shot at the house. The bullet struck the window shutter. After shooting Meyer threw a stone through the window, Marquette says, and the latter retreated, discharging his weapon as he ran. On golng to his garden yesterday morning, Marquette says, he discovered that seventy-five tomato vines had been uprooted, and his garden cultivator had been thrown into the weeds a block from his house. Marquette charges Meyer with the destruction of his plants, and declares that he will offer a reward of $20 for the latter's arrest. The police are seeking Meyer, but he had eluded cabture up to last night.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL. Wallace, United States Deputy Surveyor

wallace. United States Deputy Surveyor and Clerk, committed suicide at 5 o'clock this morning at his home in Independence by shooting himself with a revolver through the back of the head.

He left no message to indicate a reason for the act. It is known, however, that Mr. Wallace had been in need of money recently and it may be that worry over his financial affairs prompted him to shoot himself. While Mr. Wallace has on occasions lately been somewhat despondent, he was in an unusually cheerful frame of mind last night. Early in the evening he and his son, Frank, visited the home of Judge E. P. Gates, whose nephew he was by marriage.

Mr. Wallace retired early. At 5 o'clock this morning without disturbing Mrs. Wallace, he left his bed and went to a writing desk in the same room, where there was a revolver. This he took to the bathroom in the rear of the house.

From the position of the body, Mr. Wallace evidently stood in the center of the bathroom floor, placed the muzzle of the revolver back of the left ear and fired. The builet came out over the right eye and fell into the bath tub.

Mr. Wallace was prominent 'in Masonry. At one time he was grand commander of the State of Missouri, the highest office in the York rite in Missouri. He was 43 years old.
